Shaniqua Burke, Napranum | Community health worker

Shaniqua unlocks the power of skills

A deep passion to contribute to her community was the fuel driving Shaniqua Burke to study a Certificate III in Aboriginal and/or Torres Strait Islander Primary Health Care with TAFE Queensland.

Shaniqua gained knowledge and skills in basic health care, screening processes, and advocating for community member rights and needs.

Working with Apunipima Cape York Health Council, Shaniqua has also played a lead role in developing the clinic's social prescribing trial – the first ever to be led by an Aboriginal health worker in Australia. The trial involves prescribing referrals to non-medical programs such as health and fitness programs as an innovative way to combat chronic health issues across communities.

“I’m a naturally shy person but through training, with all the knowledge and skills I’ve gained, I’ve grown in confidence and improved my communication skills,” Shaniqua said.

“Being a part of the clinic’s social prescribing trial has been a very rewarding experience. To be able to help create a strategy for my people which supports them to live longer, healthier lives ... is a dream come true.”
